Site Category: Rock Art

SiteComments:

The recorded site comprised a rock shelter on the western part of the Blouberg. The site was south facing and at least 30 m long as seen. The predominant rock art tradition visible in the shelter was found to be Sotho. The paintings consisted of white finger painted animal figures. Animals included giraffes, possible felines and antelope. At least two human figures with drawn bows were also noted. The white finger paintings seemed to be superimposed over earlier red and yellow paintings.
