Site Category: Structures

SiteComments:

This site comprises the concrete foundation remains of a rectangular structure. Although the exact age of the structure is not known, it is evidently the remains of a black homestead from the historic to recent past. While the structural remains possess a low significance, experience has shown that in terms of black African culture, infants and stillborn babies were frequently buried under the floors of the homesteads, or against its walls. As these graves were frequently unmarked, the possibility exists for these types of burials to also occur at this site. Site extent: 15mx10m.
