

Annexure B - Architectural Significance

119 Doble road view from the service area. There is nothing architecturally noteworthy. Image taken 2nd of June 2022

119 Doble road view from the Driveway. What is noteworthy is how neat the property is, the owners take great pride in 119 Doble road. Basic timber balustrade, with the same stone cladding tile that was seen around the front columns. Grey driveway paving is fairly new. Aluminium windows with a bespoke garage door. A simple steelwork assembly roof is present. With that being said, there is still nothing architecturally significant. Image taken 2nd of June 2022

119 Doble road view from the street. The building is concealed behind landscaping for privacy. Due to visibility, it is reasonable to assume that the average pedestrian would not be able to identify anything historically significant. Google maps screenshot.

Conclusion

Very little, to nothing can be said about 119 Doble road in terms of Historical significance. The building has had many refreshes and improvements that may have concealed noteworthy historical elements, but without evidence of such elements, it is unlikely that 119 Doble road has at any point in its history, contributed to the Heritage of the area and Durban as a whole.

Referencing

- Harris, A., 2022. 12 of Durban's Art Deco Buildings you will just Adore - Anne Roselt Design. [Image][online] Anne Roselt Design. Available at: <<https://anneroselt.com/2017/05/29/12-of-durbans-art-decor-buildings-you-will-just-adore/>> [Accessed 2 June 2022]. (650x507)
- MacDonal, G.W. 2022. The Old Court House - A Link with Early Durban | The Heritage Portal. [Image][online] Available at: <<https://www.theheritageportal.co.za/article/old-court-house-link-early-durban>> [Accessed 2 June 2022].