Teargas, bullets fly in Eldorado Park riots

Four residents arrested for public violence

By Emile Bosch

Members of the Eldorado Park community, south of Johannesburg, yesterday clashed violently with police as they were protesting the death of a 16-year-old disabled boy.

The teenager passed away on Wednesday night after allegedly being shot and killed by a police officer.

Community member Majiet Amien was disgusted by the incident.

"He was standing there innocently and they shot him at short range. It's wrong," Amien said.

Public protection police responded to the mob with rubber bullets and teargas.

Members of the community attacked police officers with rocks and bottles. In one instance, live ammunition was fired at police officers, while they were sweeping a block of flats.

Gauteng SAPS head of communication Brig Mathapelo Peters said the Independent Police Investigative Directorate, the police watchdog, is investigating the incident.

Four community members were arrested for public violence, after at least three police officers were injured during the protest.

Three police vehicles were also damaged in the process.

Community members have vowed to continue protesting until police brutality in the area is addressed.

"If these people of SAPS do not come here now, we are going to do the same as what is happening in the United States," Amien said.

Parts of the US have seen violent protests this week following the shooting of 29-year-old African-American Jacob Blake, who was shot at the weekend in front of his three children who were in the car.

The much-publicised incident occurred in Kenosha, Wisconsin, on Sunday, as officers were attempting to arrest Blake over a domestic violence dispute.

Court bid for board's return fails

Sisulu fired nine of Umgeni Water board members

By Mpumzi Zuzile

The Pietermaritzburg High Court this week dismissed with costs an urgent application by nine former Umgeni Water board members to have their terminations reversed.

The nine also wanted the interim board interdicted from assuming office and performing its functions.

The nine former board members also wanted the court to interdict human settlements, water and sanitation minister Lindiwe Sisulu's decision to appoint the interim board and to declare their dismissal unlawful.

Sisulu's office welcomed the court's decision.

Members of the former board, whose appointments were terminated on July 31, had brought a motion before the court, seeking an urgent interdict.

"The judge did not see how the minister in exercising her legally empowered duties could cause irreparable harm to the former members," said Sisulu's spokesperson Yonela Diko.

Diko said Sisulu hoped that this judgment served as a clear message to all who serve in the public institutions, regardless of level, that they all serve the people of SA and implement the policies of the government.

"Water and sanitation services are a critical catalyst for economic growth and development, making this sector crucial for service delivery in the country, and to this end the water boards play a vital role in the supply of water and water resource management."

Former board members

Visvin Reddy, Siboniso Shabalala, William Mapena, Teboho Nkhalahle, Nompumelelo Chamane, Mbali Ndlovu, Simonsenkosi Chamane, Suleman Badat and Thandwa Mthembu brought an application against the minister.

Sisulu had said the reason for disbanding the board was because of the failure of previous minister Gugile Nkwinti to obtain cabinet approval before appointing the board.

In his ruling, judge Pieter Bezuidenhout said: "There is no irreparable harm if the interdict is not granted as the only issue is that of remuneration, which I have dealt with, and the balance of convenience, which is not in applicants' favour."

"I am satisfied that the applicants have failed to make out a case for the interim relief which is sought in the notice of motion." - TimesLIVE
